Senator Scott at Work. bours each day at the capitol. His an equal distribution of cars. physicians tell him he can do this, but the rest of the day he is rest-

Yesterday, during the discussion of the "omnibus bill," he made a few remarks. West Virginia has a great many claims before Congress, and many of these are for property used by the federal government during the Civil war, and many are for property destroyed. Senator Scott are already announcing that they intend to pass a tariff bill at the next best he could for all these claims, and to have them sent to the court knows what happened to the counof claims or have them passed in the Senate. He is in favor of the claims bill; but so many amendments are being offered on the floor of the Sen-cautious with their announcements ate that the bill stands a chance of else there may be hard times ever being defeated.

The senator recognized this when he spoke as follows:

"Mr. President, West Virginia probably suffered in proportion as much as any state in the Union during the Civil war. I have in my charge, I suppose, fifty or a hundred absolutely good claims, as think, which ought to be paid; but I realize the fact-and I hope other enators will view the matter in the same light-that if we load this bill down, we shall not get a bill at all. I would rather have the half loaf the senator from New Hampshire (Mr. (Burnham) has given us in the pending bill than not to get any. buy seals, you will be enlisted in a At some future time I hope, if I am not here, that some representative from West Virgila may be able to get the other bills through. I think we only endanger the pending bill by offering amendments, and 'I hope the bill may be allowed to pass."

The editor of the Salem Expres evidently thinks better of the criminal court of this county than the court does of his ability to sit as a juror, judging from the very few times he was called upon in four long weeks to serve as a juror. The times of his service on juries were almost as scare as hen teeth.
